

HATS OFF TO THE REGIMEN

First Kentucky Khaki Boy
Applauded By Multitude

Gen. Bell, Chief of Staff,
S. A., In Line of March.

Military Jubilee Opens With Street Pageant.

THOUSANDS ALONG ROUT

The military jubilee parade of Greater Louisville called out thousands yesterday. The sidewalks for a line march more than a mile in length were jammed with humanity, eager to pay a tribute of patriotic affection to the First Kentucky Regiment, the flag and the spirit military. The parade dignified in the hot May-day sun. As it weaved its way through the gaily decorated streets cheer upon cheer rolled in the air. Its length was a good thing to attract not only those who are spectators of a show, but the man deep down in whose heart lives a patriotic regard for the military wing of government, State and city.

marched to the applause of thousands yesterday. It was more than a military jubilee. It was an exhibit of the forces whose daily duty it is to protect and safeguard the lives of the people who lined the curbs and packed the sidewalks to give a hand, wave a handkerchief and loose a cheer. There were fire fighters, United States officers, police, soldiers, captains of industrial and commercial exploitation and exploration, the Mayors of the three Free Cities in the parade. And there nothing left to do but for the great crowd to show its appreciation by cheering itself hoarse.

* * *

A Triumphal Procession.

The military jubilee parade to thirty minutes to pass a given point and was in the line of march one hour and forty minutes. It was a triumphal procession from start to finish. Every one concerned said the parade was a great success. Col. Haldeaman, Major Grinstead, Gen. J. Franklin Bell, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, a third in command of the entire of the United States, Fred W. Kelsk, the newly-elected president of the Commercial Club, R. S. Brown, former president, and A. T. Macdonald, secretary of the Commercial Club. The parade got away from the matron point at First street a Broadway a few minutes before 6 o'clock. It disbanded at Fourth avenue and Broadway at 4:30 o'clock. Without a single mishap it finished with the people cheering as just as when the parade began its existence a full hour and a half before when the afternoon was still young. The parade traversed the principal streets of the city. The manity, which at all times was grat that the sidewalks would contain all of it, was pushed far into the streets. Instead of diminishing as the parade progressed, the congestion grew worse, strengthening the belief that one look for many was sufficient.

* * *

Gen. Bell Came Long Way

Gen. J. Franklin Bell, third in command of the United States army, and one of the other two is the President traveled all the way from Washington to be a part of it. It has been long time since an officer of such distinguished rank has honored Louisville with a visit. There were United States army Captains yesterday who said that there was not another

The boys of the First Kentucky Regiment, headed by Col. W. B. Haldeman, boosted the glory and fame of the old Louisville Legion another notch higher as they swung through the streets in their olive-drab uniforms. The martial tread, the well-nigh perfect alignment, the saucily-tipped forage hats, the easy, steady stride, the ished equipment—all in all, near without fault, as Gen. Bell said afte ward, drew attention to the 500 bo of the regiment and their Colonel fro beginning to end.

* * *

Not a Mishap.

The entire afternoon passed without a mishap being reported to the police. There were ambulances and extra cabs provided for emergencies, but no one found any need for them. The veteran firemen who participated the parade, not one of them whose hair has not been whitened with age and service, bore up like the veterans they are and stayed with the battalions until almost the very end.

street and Broadway. At that time the parade started. In the van were two of Louisville's finest. They had blossomed out in their new spring uniforms. As police they were the top notchers of the Louisville force. Next came Col. Haldeman and his staff. For Following was the command of the First Kentucky Regiment. Backing it up were four United States army ambulance wagons, for which no use was found, further than that they added an additional feature to the parade.

Next in line were carriages with the distinguished guests, the the distinguished guests, the army officers and the Commercial Club regulars. In the first carriage rode Gen. J. Franklin Bell, Mayor Grinstead, Mr. S. Brown, the president of the Military Jubilee Committee, and Cap. Llewellyn Spears. In the twenty-on carriages following rode

Those In the Carriages.

Second—Col. George Ruhlen, F. W. Keisker, Dr. J. K. Patterson, Gen. John L. Castleman.

Third—Senator Carpenter, Dr. J. C. W.

Fourth—Maj. George G. Bailey, C. C. McChord, Capt. K. J. Hampton, W. W. Hite.

Dr. J. B. Wathen, Lieut. Philip W. Corbushier, Maj. L. O. Green.
Seventh—Mayor Best, of New Albany.

The notice which comes with "The Duchess" declares it to be "sweet and wan"; so is "Little Bo-Peep," and owing to long nursery traditions one might still be able to mourn the little lady's lost sheep, but it is unnecessary to do so, for the novel of modern fiction has been put through many paces which would make him glad that the Duchess was ever found. The concluding note on noting the amount of material on a page is comparable to the discovery that the peach basket has a false bottom, but which is not a great satisfaction when the fruit proves to be green and of poor quality.

It is a book of soliloquy and dialogue. The race suicide question in literature has been given the sharpest kind of a turning by Miss Sinclair, and it is this which the Harpers have just published, called "The Judgment of Eve." It is doubtful whether Miss Sinclair could have written a more powerful and more fiery for an American public which has been led into more or less agitation over the subject, and it is certain that the novel must have a great effect on the public mind, and it is a pity that it is a problem or an argument. The story is merely the story of a woman who more than "fulfills her destiny"—and pays, and pays, and pays.

On April 1 the house of Duffield & Co. completed its fifth year in the publishing business. It was founded by the firm was the old English morality play, "Everyman," which was issued on April 1, 1903, and is still selling, has

NON-INTOXICATING
BEER

REFRESHING
BEER

FEHR'S Nextobeer

REG. U.S. PAT. OFFICE 1908

GUARANTEED UNDER THE FOOD AND DRUGS ACT OF JUNE 30, 1906, SERIAL NUMBER 6238.

Contains All the Nutritious Elements of Barley and Hops,

With Its Intoxicating Principle Thoroughly Eliminated,
There Being in Its Composition

Not Over One-Half of One Per Cent. of Alcohol
Or Just Enough to Preserve It.

It Is Essentially a Liquid Food.

Frank Fehr Brewing Company

— BRANCH OF —

Central Consumers Company

(INCORPORATED)

Louisville, Ky. Both Phones 856 or 467.